

ENGLISHMEN IN TENNIS FINALS

ONE WILL DEFAULT AND THE OTHER WILL MEET WHITMAN.

Former American Champion Persists In His Plan Not to Play in Challenge Round If He Wins From Doherty—Huntington's Showing Against Whitman.

NEWPORT, Aug. 26.—After a week of weeding out the championship lawn tennis tournament has narrowed down to four men, who are left to struggle for the American championship title. As might have been easily predicted by one and all who followed the game, these four are Mr. Larned and Whitman, the two of the American players, and the two Doherty brothers. To-morrow morning Whitman will play one of the Dohertys in the finals, but it has not been officially announced yet which of the two visitors will be put against him. Privately, however, the Englishmen have declared that the younger brother, H. L., the all-American champion, will be the one selected if nothing happens before to-morrow morning to upset their calculations. Doherty Dwight has given the foreigners until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning to name their man, and no default will be recorded against either until then. There is no question that H. L. will be used, however, if he is fit and well to-morrow. R. F. Doherty had his chance at Bay Ridge and failed, and they have decided to let the little one try.

Whitman played a discouraging match against Huntington to-day, and Doherty showed splendid form against Ware, yet to-night the betting odds range from even money to 60 to 55 in favor of the American's chances. The Dohertys intended to attend even such an important match as the Newporters' final, but it was increased to $10,000 in November, 1894, with a capital stock of $50,000, which was increased in 1898 to $250,000 after Mr. Ballantine became interested in it.

NOAH'S FALL KILLED HIM.

Had Attack of Vertigo in Hotel Imperial—Fell and Broke His Skull.

William H. Noah, who was taken sick in the lobby of the Hotel Imperial on Sunday night and later fell on the marble floor of the toilet room, died yesterday in the New York Hospital of a fractured skull. Noah went to the hotel with two women. He left them sitting near the door and went to the desk where he staggered and fell. He was assisted to his feet and was taken a few steps, apparently all right again. Then he went downstairs where he had an attack of vertigo. He fell again and became unconscious.

After Noah had been taken away, the two women began to inquire for him. They hurried away without giving their names, saying they would go to the hospital to see him. Mrs. Noah, his wife, died about a year ago, and her death affected him greatly. She was a sister of William Morris, the actor. Walter N. Ladd, director of the theatrical manager, was Noah's cousin.

SHOT BY A NEGRO.

Thomas Downing of East Fishkill Wounded After Offering the Negro a Drink.

NEWBURGH, Aug. 25.—Thomas Downing, 22 years of age, was fatally shot at a late hour last night while in Fishkill, Dutchess county. With Fred Lewis he set out Sunday morning from East Fishkill on a trip to Mattawan. The men left there at 9 o'clock and at 10 o'clock arrived in Fishkill. From there it was necessary to walk several miles. The two men got into a friendly discussion as to the distance and the walk, however, the champion did not say much for himself, and R. D. Lewis thought he was doing everything in his power to get the champion to play it out.

The two matinees, however, were separated, and R. D. Doherty and Ware had the championship court, and they put up a fine exhibition, the play being over in the first set, and after that passed to the second, and so on. Ware had the best of the set, but in the last set, Doherty had the best of it. Doherty finally pulled out the set by a 7-5.

In the second set, the first two or three games were won by Doherty, but Doherty only dropped out Ware. He drew the ball fast and low, and seemed able to reach anything that the American could drive at him. The assailant fled. Downing is in critical condition and it is thought will never be able to play again. Lewis and Downing live in East Fishkill and are industrious young farmers.

ETHEL GRIMSTON A BRIDE.

She's an Estranged Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kendall.

The marriage of Miss Ethel Muriel Grimston to Frederick M. Leonard in Philadelphia last Thursday has been announced. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter Grimston of England, who are well known to playgoers as the Kendals. She has been in this country since 1895, although in the announcement of the marriage her address is given as London. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. N. J. Williams.

Ethel Grimston and her brother, Dornington, have not lived with their parents for years. It is said that the desire of the children to follow a stage career was responsible for the family troubles that caused the children to leave home.

Summer lassitude relieved by JOHANN HOFF'S EXTRACT

It gives immediate prompting of strength without reaction.

INSIST upon JOHANN HOFF'S and you will not be imposed upon. No substitute is equal to it.

EISEN & MENDELSON CO., of New York, Sole Agents.

The simplest remedy for indigestion, constipation, biliousness and the many ailments arising from a disordered stomach. Liver or bowels is Hoff's forte. They have a special formula for becoming liver and not so well directed. Whitman began to force the play with better results and soon had Huntington at his mercy, winning the first round and the next two sets in most improved railroading style. Huntington got only three games after the second set, but nevertheless Whitman's position was so strong that he won to many of his friends, who are counting on him to beat the Englishman, Doherty, in the final.

The familiar turf Whitman seemed to regain his form very quickly and after the third set Huntington never had a chance.

His previous condition was poor, and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a tarter. After a long dispute between the two, Huntington held the first set by a 7-5, and held the exchange well in the second set. Whitman could not seem to shake off his nervousness and made many unnecessary mistakes. Huntington, however, as always, played over on a side court with his galleries, and when he had his own, the dreaded reverse twist had no terror for him, and he passed Whitman frequently on his service. At the latter ran in, however, he was not well, too, and Whitman was plainly nervous.

He had expected an easy victory and he had caught a t